American Democracy In Action

(Left) November 26, 1789, was a day set aside to celebrate the adoption of the United States Constitution. (Right) This November, American democracy is once more in action as we share expertise and technology with the African nation of Cameroon.

November is a notable month in the history of democracy. In November, 1777, the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union, uniting the states under a common government were adopted by the Continental Congress and submitted to the states for ratification. November 26, 1789, was another special day in American history: President George Washington set this date aside as a day of national thanksgiving for the adoption of the United States Constitution.

November, 1985, may well someday be considered another landmark date in the history of democracy. Representatives from the Trade Commission of Cameroon, an independent republic in Africa, will be in the United States to buy American products and technology in an effort to strengthen their economy. The mission is led by minister of Industry and Commerce, Minister Ongolo.

The Cameroonians are seeking to diversify their sources of raw materials and equipment and to benefit from US expertise in various areas of business and marketing. Several joint Cameroonian and American investment projects are expected, involving the dairy, housing and natural gas industries, among others.

Many Americans welcome the visit by the Cameroon Trade Mission. The Cameroonians want to buy American—and that means more exports and a more favorable trade balance. That's good news for our economy and may mean more jobs will be made available in many industries.

A free booklet describes the Cameroon economy; important demographics and geography. Write: Cameroon Trade & Investment Mission, c/o van Kloborg & Associates, 1100 17th Street, NW Suite 1000, Washington, D.C., 20036 or call (202) 463-2820. Telex: WASH-IPC 89-2580.
